Humility

The Christian is one who has forever given up the hope of being able to think of himself as a good man. He is forever a sinner for whom the Son of God had to die because by no other means could he be forgiven. In a sense we can say that he has given up the effort to be good. That is no longer his aim. He is seeking to do one thing and one thing only --- to pay back something of the unpayable debt of gratitude to Christ who loved him as a sinner and gave Himself for him. And in this new and self-forgetting quest he finds that which --- when he sought it directly --- was forever bound to elude him, the good life.

No two motives could be more distinct from one another than these two, yet it is the commonest thing to find them confused. How ready we are to take Christ as our pattern and teacher only, using the words of the Gospel, and yet never allowing ourselves to face the experience of forgiveness at the foot of the Cross --- the humiliating discovery that, so far from our being like Jesus, there is literally no hope for us at all except that He has forgiven us. There is a whole universe of moral and psychological [and spiritual] difference between saying, "Christ is my pattern, and if I try I can be like Him" and saying, "I am so far from goodness that Christ had to die for me that I might be forgiven." The one is still in the world of legalism, and its centre of attention is still the self. The other is in the world of grace, and its centre of attention is another to whose love it is our whole and only aim to give ourselves. The one must always lack what the other increasingly has, the spontaneity and whole-heartedness that come when there is the whole force of an emotionally [and spiritually] integrated life behind action.

This week we are collecting pop tarts for the Henderson County High School backpacks.

Please contribute if possible.

Next Sunday begins a new Sunday school quarter and that means:

“Hotcakes for Shortcakes”

Plan to be here next Sunday at 9:00 am and enjoy a hot stack of pancakes straight off the griddle and help kickoff the new Sunday school quarter.

Ignite Your Passion for GOD!

If you find yourself:

- Reluctant to gather with other believers
- Easily finding multiple reasons to miss church services
- Singing songs as empty words on the screen
- Turning to the next quick fix on spiritual growth
- or just plain going through the motions of church

Then you WILL NOT want to miss this opportunity to “Ignite your Passion for GOD!” Starting in March, John is going to lead a 6 week study that will open our eyes to the things that undermine our interest in things of GOD and discover practical steps we can take to ignite a fire that will bring us into a more meaningful faith. He is very excited to be sharing this experience with you and anyone else with a desire to know GOD!

Sunday mornings at 9:30 am
